Welcome to the Ethnographical museum “Su magasinu de su binu”, a building that goes back to the first half of the 19th century which was originally used for processing and preserving wine. In the open courtyard you can admire the container used in the preparation of copper sulphate used for treating the grapes, a cart for the oxen, a cart for the mule and one for the horses.

The Ethnographic museum contains objects that were commonly used in the day-to-day lives of our grandparents. With the arrival of progress these objects were substituted by others that were more productive and easier to use. A lot of the objects found in this museum recall very old traditions.
